MedStar St. Mary's Hospital

Coming Together to Help the Homeless

The primary goal of the new medical respite program is to fill the gaps in health care for the homeless. This new program is just one of several new services offered through the Veterans Housing Outreach and Assistive Services facility.

The multibed facility, recently opened at the Three Oaks Center in Lexington Park, offers individuals a place to recuperate from acute illness or surgery after being discharged from the hospital. The medical respite program offers patients 24-hour access to a bed during prescribed recovery time and a physical address where they can receive such services as visits from a home health nurse. The program also connects discharged homeless patients with care coordinators from MedStar St. Mary's Hospital, who will follow their recovery, help them find primary care, schedule and set up appointments, and coordinate services with a neighborhood wellness advocate.

"One of the primary goals of the program is to help stabilize these individuals' lives by connecting them to services and benefits, which eventually may move them out of homelessness," said Lori Werrell, director of Population and Community Health, the community outreach program of MedStar St. Mary's Hospital. "The hope is to transition these individuals to permanent housing and a better quality of life."
